

Overview of the Rights of Persons with Disabilities in the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia

Introduction:

The government of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia is committed to providing a decent life for all its citizens and residents, taking into account the different needs of various groups, including people with disabilities. The Kingdom of Saudi Arabia is one of the countries that have acceded to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD) and its Optional Protocol in the belief that all people are entitled to an independent, dignified, and equal life. Since its accession to the CRPD, Saudi Arabia has been committed to promoting, protecting, and ensuring the complete enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms by persons with disabilities on an equal basis with others.

Today, persons with disabilities face numerous challenges that necessitate a strengthening of international cooperation between nations to guarantee their rights and effectively enhance their presence in societies. Several disability-related initiatives were included in the Kingdom's Vision 2030 programs to promote and protect the rights of persons with disabilities, develop services provided to them, and provide them with means of prevention, care, and rehabilitation, demonstrating Saudi Arabia's interest in disability.

In Saudi Arabia, 7–10% of the population is estimated to have a disability, compared to a global estimate of more than 1 billion. There is no doubt that this percentage is governed by the circumstances and factors that led to its rise. Despite the challenges faced by people with disabilities, the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia remains committed to its major role in empowering and supporting them in various fields, both locally and internationally. Saudi Arabia is aware of the significance of concerted efforts in addressing the common challenges posed by changes and their negative impacts.

Legal Framework:

The "Basic Law of Governance", which includes constitutional principles and provisions, states in Article 26 that "the Kingdom shall protect human rights in accordance with Islamic law," which reinforces the concepts of justice and equality and prohibits all forms of discrimination, including disability. In addition to a number of other regulations and normative foundations that directly address disability-related issues or general regulations that contain provisions pertaining to persons with disabilities, the most important of which are:

7	Law on Proving Health Incapacity to Work.
8	Administrative Instructions for Non-Governmental Centers for Disability Rehabilitation.

These normative foundations include provisions granting persons with disabilities the right to the highest levels of health without discrimination based on disability, such as:

1	Health Law.
2	Civil Service Law.
3	Labor Law and Its Implementing Regulations.
4	Law of Criminal Procedures.
5	the Law of Procedure before Shari'ah Courts.

The "Rights of Persons with Disabilities Act" is one of Saudi Arabia's most important projects to empower people with disabilities, as it encompasses multiple current and future fields designed to protect and enhance the rights of people with disabilities and ensure their equal access to all services. Saudi Arabia has made significant progress towards conformity with international standards and best practices, most notably the CRPD. The project incorporated fundamental disability-related principles, such as accessibility, reasonable accommodation, and nondiscrimination based on disability. In addition to recognizing sign language as an official language, the Act also broadens the definition of the term "person with disability."

Regional and International Conventions and Laws Concerning the Rights of Persons with Disabilities:

The Kingdom of Saudi Arabia has ratified and acceded to a number of international empowerment agreements for persons with disabilities, including:
